Welcome to the Tante Paula at the Hopfensee

Nothing else than wet flatbread is said to be the beginning of brewing beer around 10 000 BC. This accidentally formed mush began to ferment because of yeast spores in the air. In this way arose an alcoholic, intoxicating mixture that is making and will make history. Baking and brewing were part of everyday business in the middle ages. There were women like Paula who made excellent beer because baking and brewing took place one after the other at the same fireplace such as in the village's own bakehouses. During the baking process, yeasts were released which could be found in the air of the bakehouses. These yeast particles set the fermentation process in motion during the beer production.

Interesting facts and special features for you, dear guests:

+ Domestic water connection with Grander water

+ Salt for seasoning food

We only use natural, untreated primary salt (unrefined) in the kitchen and sea salt for seasoning on the tables.

+ Spices and herbs

Only herbs and spices are used in the production and refinement of our dishes.

+ microwave-free kitchen

You can look forward to high-quality food that is not subjected to microwave treatment, but is prepared gently.

+ Food

Many of our dishes are cooked using the sous-vide method. Sous-vide cooking refers to the method of cooking meat, fish or vegetables at relatively low temperatures of less than 100°C.

Vegetarian, vegan and high protein dishes are specially marked!

Special beer enjoyment

My aunt Paula brewed beer at home. Fascinated by the smell and taste of beer as a child, I always wanted to brew it myself. Now we have our own microbrewery. Here we brew handmade Bavarian beer. Lager, dark and wheat beers are brewed here according to the Purity Law of 1516. Unfiltered, the only way to ensure that all the good ingredients are still in the beer.

Coffee party

Beverages made from roasted plants and grains were already brewed in the ancient Babylon and Egypt. In the 18th century coffee beans became a rare and expensive luxury good, because of the prussian coffee monopoly 1781 and the continental blockade from 1806. So people in our part of the world came up with the idea of devising drinks which should at least taste like coffee. This is how a drink was created that aunts and grandmothers used to make. It was called Muckefuck (probably from „mocca faux“ – french for fake coffee) and is still known as a caffeine free coffee alternative, e.g. barley coffee, chicory coffee or spelt coffee.
